TUESDAY : : : MARCH 8, 1881 THE RETIREMENT OF THURMAN. The retirement of so many leaders from the United States senate will be seriously felt by the country. When the senate again conenes it will be composed of many new members, which will give it a strange newness and freshness to those who have so long been familiar with the old leaders. New men will take the places of Thurman, Blaine, Kirkwood, Windom, Wallace, Bruce, Eaton, Me-Donald, Kernan, Bailey, Withers, Randoiph, Hereford, Hamblin and Carpenter. spective friends. The Democratic party will ertainly feel the loss of Allen G. Thurman, as he has in all probability retired from publie life forever. His retiracy is a great and duties irreparable loss, as in an impromptu debate he several heads of bureaus. was a match for Conkling, Edmunds, Blaine or any of the Republican leaders. There has never been a purer, better specimen of an American, there has never been a higher type of an incorruptible statesman in the enate since its foundation than A. G. Thurman. The fatal mistake of his life was his temporary abandonment of hard money just at a time when the ousiness of the country was greatly depressed. This mistake was the result of a patriotic desire to do something to alleviate he distress that filled the land. That Senator Thurman was persuaded against his will to adopt the policy that more money was needed to give an impetus to business, is apparent from the fact that he abandoned his views so soon as there was a change for the for President in 1876. That was a greater misfortune to his party than to him, for the Presidency would have added nothing to his fame, while it he had been elected, as he ould have been, he would not have permitted the Republicans to steal the office to which he had been elected. As it is, the next generation will look back upon Thurman as the present generation does upon the great leaders of the past generation. Indeed, when the speeches of Thurman are collected and published, history will regard him as one of the ablest men of the pres-The logical directness and the great abilities of Thurman pervade all his speeches. But besides the power of his great mind, there is a fervid patriotism in all his utterances, which commanded the respect of his political opponents. He and dmunds were more intimate than any two men in congress. Indeed, every Republican member of congress entertained the highest respect and admiration for Thurman's ability, knows no sectional lines. While other sens- | son and R. T. In every part of the country societies have oeen organized for this purpose and much good has been accomplished. As evidence of this we have only to refer to a case in Illinois. The whole community around a little town called Tonica, has for some time been greatly agitated by a case of deliberate and persistent cruelty to animals. The Chicago papers give a full report of the case, from hich it seems that a farmer, a monster by ence, pennriousness, or sheer laziness has neglected to properly care for his stock, supplying them with neither food nor drink in reasonable quantity, nor sufficient shelter, so that his animals were literally starving to death. Not knowing just how to apply the proper remedy, some of our citizens applied o the Illinois Humane society of Chicago for advice and assistance in bringing the fiender to justice.
